Standard Attendant Care Services, Support services and Home Care Services (Items 300198, 300201, 1000245, 1000246, 1000247, 1000248, 1000249, 1000250, 1000251, 1000252, 1000253, 1000254)

Please note: All services require prior approval by the insurer.

A service must relate directly to the accepted work-related injury/ies and be considered a necessary and reasonable expense under the Workers' Compensation and Rehabilitation Act 2003 (the Act).

Services approved must relate to the care of a worker and not extended to family or support networks.

Personal services will only be approved for a brief period in which a worker is unable to function independently. It's important to always focus on increasing a worker's independence. When reviewing a proposed service, consider if there is equipment and/or aid to support a worker in completing the activity independently.

Serious Personal Injury and complex injury claims, as assessed by an appropriately qualified assessor may require ongoing arrangements with care and support services to support complex support needs. (Spinal Cord Injury, Traumatic Brain Injury, Brachial Plexus Injury, Serious Burns, Inhalation Burns resulting in permanent respiratory impairment, Blindness, Amputations, and some other complex injuries) Please refer to High Intensity Attendant Care below.

Where the claims do not require High Intensity Attendant Care, WorkCover will apply the Support Services Table of Costs rates i.e. Standard Attendant Care.

High Intensity Attendant Care Services

High intensity supports refers to personal care services that require professional skills, training, and expertise. Like standard attendant care services, high intensity supports may be delivered while the participant/injured worker is at home or away from home and in the community.

- suitably trained attendant care workers
 - assistant in nursing
 - enrolled nurse
 - endorsed enrolled nurse
 - registered nurse
 - clinical nurse or nurse practitioner.

The appropriate provider of high intensity supports depends on a participant's/injured worker's individual circumstances and must be consistent with the NISQ Agency's policies which apply to providers.

High intensity supports may be appropriate where a participant requires the following in relation to their accepted injury:

- catheter changes
- complex bowel care such as an enema
- complex wound management and pressure care
- ventilation management
- tracheostomy changes
- percutaneous endoscopic gastronomy (PEG) changes
- pain management
- oversight of personal care programs for those with significant or complex medical needs.
